Me but better

being fallen in love with. "My type is me, but better," Amstell says in "Do Nothing," adding, "Which, I think, is O.K. I just need to find some-body who wants himself, but much, much worse." Reich appreciated the way Amstell was "playing both ends of the spectrum of smart and stupid—he simultaneously makes himself out to be a guru and an idiot, often in the same sentence. He is able to genuinely connect both those things, and not use one as a setup to the other, but make those two elements of his personality reliant upon each other."
