

Old men and clothes

good. Vintage is better.

I own a pile of pocket squares, bought and inherited. Lovely, in principle; I'm a sucker for anything printed on silk. In practice? Hard to wear. With a tie, finding the right combination isn't easy, and matching outright is out of the question. Without a tie, the casual dapperness of it all can be a bit much. Maybe I just need to lean into it? Perhaps this will get easier as I get even older. (Old men and clothes is an interesting topic in itself: I think clothes become more important as we age, but the authority of age means men can pull off more without appearing to try too hard.)
